Tokyo’s old fish market area to be redeveloped

Tokyo's old Tsukiji fish market area will be redeveloped. The market, famous for its tuna auctions and sushi, was demolished six years ago. Now, a new plan will replace it with a stadium, skyscrapers, offices, shops, and restaurants. The project, led by Mitsui Fudosan, will cost 900 billion yen ($5.7 billion).

Some people in Tokyo disagree with the plan. They want the area to become a garden instead. They are worried about pollution and safety, especially during earthquakes.

The new development aims to attract visitors from Japan and abroad. It will include a home stadium for the Yomiuri Giants baseball team and a biotechnology research center. The construction will start next year.

The old market's outer area with sushi and ice cream stalls will stay the same. The new project will connect to ferries and subway lines, making it a major spot for events and tourism.
